

A career in the oil and gas industry

Social Performance Manager

The purpose of this role is to assess and manage the socio-economic impacts and engagement activities associated with the company's infrastructure development projects

Your responsibilities and key objectives will be:

- Ensuring that socio-economic impacts are assessed, understood and managed.
- Developing appropriate action plans working in conjunction with the company's Environment, Health and Safety professionals.
- Developing of stakeholder management strategies.
- Managing the company's responses to internationally recognised standards.

You should have a degree in humanities or social science

You will need:

- At least eight years experience in community development or social performance.
- Experience working with extractive industries or major infrastructure projects.
- Developing country experience working with large teams in remote locations.
- Ability to integrate socio-economic impacts into project planning activities.
- High levels of personal integrity, and the ability to influence and inspire.
- Excellent oral and written communication skills.